Day Master

This chart has a Metal Day Master born in a Fire month. The stem itself reads this way: Jewel, coin and finished blade rather than raw ore: cool, smooth and already refined. Heaped earth buries it, which is the one thing it truly fears, while moving water rinses it until it shows what it is. Under summer heat it wants damp earth for cover. In deep winter it wants the small contained fire and never the open blaze, which would only melt what took so long to refine. As for the season: The season controls the Day Master element, the weakest of the five seasonal states. Everything the chart does from here has to be paid for by support found elsewhere.

Five elements

Wood

Count: 1 · Balance: Balanced

Wood is present in proportion. There is enough initiative to begin things and enough give to change course without the chart being governed by either.

Fire

Count: 2 · Balance: Balanced

Fire is present in proportion. There is enough heat to be seen and to convince, without the chart burning through what it builds.

Earth

Count: 1 · Balance: Balanced

Earth is present in proportion. There is enough ground to hold what the chart produces without so much that nothing moves.

Metal

Count: 2 · Balance: Balanced

Metal is present in proportion. There is enough edge to finish and to decide without the chart cutting into what should have been left standing.

Water

Count: 2 · Balance: Balanced

Water is present in proportion. Ideas and information move through the chart without washing away the structure they move through.

Pillar interactions

Punishment: Wu Wu

Type: Punishment · Nature: Challenging · Positions: Year pillar and Month pillar · Class: Self · Formation: Complete

Branches that grind against each other rather than colliding. A punishment works slowly and internally: friction that accumulates, obligations that turn on their holder, situations that were entered willingly and become difficult to leave. A branch doubled against itself. Nothing external is involved, which is what makes it the hardest of the four to see: the pattern repeats because the chart keeps supplying it.

Stem combination: Geng Yi

Type: Stem combination · Nature: Harmonious · Positions: Year pillar and Hour pillar · Transforms to: Metal

Two Heavenly Stems that pair off. The bond is the strongest tie between two stems and it works both ways: it can settle a stem that was causing trouble, and it can occupy a stem that was needed elsewhere. A stem that is busy being bonded is not doing its job in the chart.

Six combination: Wei Wu

Type: Six combination · Nature: Harmonious · Positions: Year pillar and Hour pillar

Two Earthly Branches that bind. The pairing is astronomical in origin, the branch the sun and moon meet in set against the branch the Dipper handle points to in the same month, which is why the six are exactly the pairs they are. In a chart it reads as attachment and cooperation, and as a tie that is not easily walked away from.

Stem clash: Xin Yi

Type: Stem clash · Nature: Challenging · Positions: Day pillar and Hour pillar

Two Heavenly Stems standing directly opposite, each controlling the other by element. Stems act faster than branches, so a stem clash shows up quickly and on the surface: open disagreement, a decision forced early, a position that has to be defended.

Day Master strength

The Day Master reading is this: Weak. In practice that means: The Day Master is under-supported. It can act, and each act costs it, so what the chart needs is help and reinforcement rather than more to do. Periods that bring resource and peer elements read as relief. On the season: The season controls the Day Master element, the weakest of the five seasonal states. Everything the chart does from here has to be paid for by support found elsewhere. On rooting: No branch stores the Day Master element, so support has to come from the stems and from the luck pillars.

Verdict: Weak · Score: -2.6 · Seasonal state: Dead · Roots: 0 · Favorable elements: Metal and Earth · Unfavorable elements: Water, Wood, and Fire

Strength factors

FACTOR	POINTS	DETAIL
Month command	-2	Metal is dead in a Fire month
Rooting	0	no branch stores Metal, so the day stem is rootless
Party support	-0.6	1 of the 3 other stems support the day stem, and 2 of the 3 other branches spend it

Luck pillar start

The luck pillars run from the birth month pillar in this direction: Forward. They begin at age 7, and each pillar governs ten years, so the current decade colours how the natal chart is experienced rather than replacing it.

Gender: Male · Direction: Forward · Start age, years: 7 · Start age, months: 2 · Boundary term: Minor Heat · Days to the term: 21.6

Year ahead

In 2027 the annual pillar is ding-wei, which meets the Day Master as Seven Killings. That relation works like this: What controls the Day Master, at the same polarity, so nothing softens the pressure. The name counts the seventh step around the stem cycle, where control lands hardest. Unchecked it is danger and exhaustion. Met with an output star to deflect it or a resource star to absorb it, it is the engine behind command, competition, and anything won under real risk.

2027 · Ding Wei

Heavenly Stem: Ding · Fire · Yin · Earthly Branch: Wei · Goat · Earth · Yin · Na Yin: Water of the Sky River · Relation to the birth year branch: No relation

The year branch forms no combination, clash, harm, or punishment with the natal year branch, so the year carries no structural relation to the birth animal. Whatever the year brings comes from the stems and from the luck pillar rather than from this axis.
